"How to Prepare for Nursing School" is a book that covers all of the important aspects of preparing for nursing school. In this book, you'll learn about the different types of nursing programs, how to select a good nursing school, how to finance your nursing education, and much more. Nursing students often enter nursing school not knowing what to expect, and sometimes find themselves struggling during the admissions process. Some students even become discouraged to the point of questioning whether they should quit, or pursue a different degree. This guide was written to give students tips insight into how to approach nursing school. The author, S.L. Page, BSN, RN, currently works as a cardiac nurse and graduated from nursing school with honors. She later went on to start a popular nursing website, where she's helped thousands of people learn more about nursing. In this book, Sarah guides the reader through what to expect when applying to nursing school. She warns students of what they can expect to face, and she shares all the tips, tricks, and resources she used along the way. Whether you're a high school student who is considering attending nursing school, or a returning adult looking to get a first (or second) degree in nursing, this book will tell you how to prepare. Examines the economic coping strategies of low-income families, using data collected through qualitative interviews conducted in 2006-08 with 35 low-income women residing in the Detroit metro area. The majority of the sample were employed at least some of the time, and most had children living with them. Rising food prices forced cutbacks in purchase of certain foods, incl. milk, cereal, fruits, and meat. Just under half reported running out of food at some point during the year. As for gov't. assistance, the then named Food Stamp Program, now called the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program, was their mainstay. Many of the families did not receive cash assistance, unemploy. benefits, or workers' compensation due to perceived access barriers.

Sponsored by the Association for Education Finance and Policy (AEFP), this groundbreaking new handbook assembles in one place the existing research-based knowledge in education finance and policy, thereby helping to define this evolving field of research and practice. It provides a readily available resource for anyone seriously involved in education finance and policy in the United States and around the world. The Handbook traces the evolution of the field from its initial focus on school inputs and the revenue sources used to finance these inputs to a focus on educational outcomes and the larger policies used to achieve them. It shows how the current decision-making context in school finance inevitably interacts with those of governance, accountability, equity, privatization, and other areas of education policy. Because a full understanding of the important contemporary issues requires input from a variety of perspectives, the Handbook draws on contributors from a variety of disciplines. While many of the chapters cover complex state-of-the-art empirical research, the authors explain key concepts in language that non-specialists can understand.

We came to the task of editing this book from different disciplines and backgrounds but with a mutuality of interest in exploring the concept of literacy campaigns in historical and comparative perspective. One of us is a professor of comparative education who has participated in and written about literacy campaigns in Third World countries, notably Nicaragua; the other is a comparative social historian who has written on literacy campaigns in Western history. Both of us believed that literacy could only be understood in particular As Harvey Graff has noted, "to consider any of the ways in historical contexts. which literacy intersects 'with social, political, economic, cultural, or psychological life ... requires excursions into other records.") Thus, we have set out in this edited collection to explore some five hundred years of literacy campaigns in vastly different societies: Reformation Germany, early modern Sweden and Scotland, the nineteenth-century United States, nineteenth- and early twentieth-century Russia and the Soviet Union, pre Revolutionary and Revolutionary China, and a variety of Third World countries in the post-World War II period (Tanzania, Cuba, Nicaragua, and India). In addition, we have included studies of the UNESCO-sponsored Experimental World Literacy Program and recent adult literacy efforts in three industrialized Western countries (the United Kingdom, France, and the United States).

The evaluation of student learning in the classroom setting is a challenging duty for nursing faculty. This is especially true when student populations are diverse in their cognitive abilities. The purpose of this project was to evaluate student learning, satisfaction, and success with a selected nursing assistant program.

The following three competency survey, and (c) a student/alumni satisfaction survey. The research project was initiated with a convenience sample of 25 high school nursing assistant students enrolled in a semester long program. Of these, 18 students completed the posttest and competency survey and 20 completed the post-graduate survey. Five students were lost through attrition and refusal to participate. The results of the project suggested that learning occurred throughout the program, students were satisfied with the curriculum, hands-on experience needs to occupy a greater percentage of classroom time per student request, and culture shock resulting from the student-to-worker transition exists despite attempts to ease the process. The overall experience of participation in the program held significant value for the students.
