

the main ongoing processes in them, and their impact on hunger. The first one - assistance to family planning - is generally considered part of the long-term solution to the hunger problem. It aims not to increase the entitlements available to individuals, but rather to decrease the number of the 'entitled.' The second one consists of development aid to increase LDC agricultural production. The international regime which is currently dominant is the liberal, export-oriented one contained in structural adjustment policy reform. This book proposes an analysis of the origins and nature of structural adjustment as well as its impact on poverty and hunger. The third issue area is food trade. It accounts for around 95 per cent of all the food that flows between nations, and constitutes an important international issue of relevance to this study. Food aid, finally, is the transfer of food on concessional terms from one country to another. It accounts for the remaining 5 per cent of international food flows (10 per cent to the poorest countries) and is commonly associated with efforts to end hunger and to promote development. The book analyzes its regime and process, as well as their effects on hunger."--BOOK JACKET. Title Summary field provided by Blackwell North America, Inc. All Rights Reserved
